The MobilityLink program is a certified transit service that provides door-to-door service for persons with disabilities. Click here for a complete guide about paratransit services \(PDF\). This service is for persons who are unable, for example, to go independently to a bus stop or train station. Click here for the application \(PDF\).

If receiving O&M training, this may be another training area to consider (using MobilityLink). For persons able to ride independently and do not need paratransit services, the Maryland Transit Administration offers discounted disability fares.

The various Video Relay Services (VRS) and Traditional Relay Service (TRS) providers offer limited services and accessibility options for Deaf, hard of hearing and DeafBlind individuals.

- If individuals use Braille devices, then the Braille TTY through the Traditional Relay may be an option.
- If the individual has some residual vision, then the VRS may be an option, perhaps with the use of a large screen.
- For individuals with residual sight and hearing who can use their voice, then a large screen captioned telephone (Captel) may be useful.

A couple of these options may also work with internet-based relay (TRS). Contacting and making an appointment with the MAT program for demonstrations and device options may be helpful.

MAT (Maryland Accessible Telecommunications) is a department under Telecommunications Access of Maryland (TAM), which is affiliated with the Maryland Department of Disabilities. To explore the Communication Facilitator for tactile signers and/or to become a CF, contact Kevin Steffy kevin.steffy@maryland.gov.
